ACUPUNCTURE

Acupuncture is a traditional Chinese medical therapy using very fine, thin, sterilized stainless steel needles to stimulate/treat specific points and organ systems. Acupuncture points have been mapped on the body by the Chinese for over 2,000 years. These modalities are used to treat organic disease and promote health. According to the World Health Organization, many common acute and chronic health disorders lend themselves to acupuncture treatment.

NATUROPATHIC MEDICINE

Naturopathic Doctors ( NDs) are primary care physicians who have chosen to focus on the study of complementary and alternative medical therapies. NDs diagnose and treat disease as well as educate patients on preventative health care methods. Naturopathic physicians also work with all other branches of medicine to provide the most thorough patient care. Being well-versed in contemporary medical care techniques and pharmaceutical drugs as well as many complementary and alternative approaches, an ND helps individuals come to the best informed decision regarding their individual health care choices.

TEACHING CLINIC

MWHC also serves as a clinical training site for senior medical interns in order to fulfill their academic requirements for medical doctorates or masters degrees. The National College of Natural Medicine and the Oregon College of Oriental Medicine provide supervising faculty and supplies.
